Message from our President

Dear Angus Breeders,

It has been a different type of weather pattern so far this fall, but all in all, a good one. Our fall sale had a new venue this year, held at the Livestock Evaluation Center in PA Furnace, PA on September 23. In spite of a beautiful day for making hay, the cattle all found new homes to excited buyers. A sincere thank you to all who helped us conduct the sale and to the consignors and buyers for your valued support! Also, it's not too early to start thinking about what you may want to consign to the Association's March Finest Female Sale held in conjunction with the PA Performance Bull Test Sale.

Pennsylvania continues to be well-represented at major cattle shows! I would also like to congratulate the exhibitors and winners at the ROV and Junior Angus shows at the Keystone International.

Please save the date of January 5th on your calendar for our annual meeting in Harrisburg. The board and officer team hope to have a great turnout! In this issue you will find committee contacts to submit your candidates for officers, board members, AND award winners. Please give this some thought and get involved by nominating some deserving individuals and/or families!

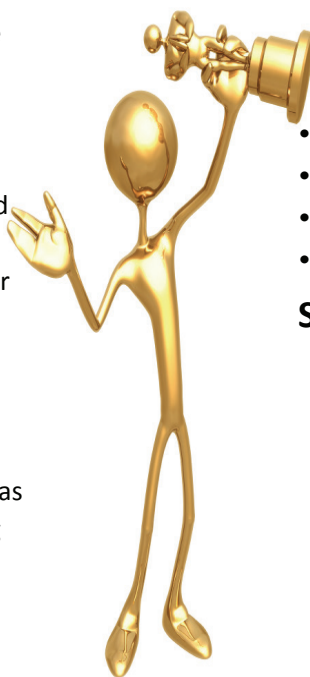

I hope you all enjoy a great finish to your fall season as you weaning and market calves and finish harvesting crops.

Sincerely,

Wendall Landis

President, PA Angus Association

Message from our Junior President

As the warm weather wraps up and the cold comes quick, we like to think back about how the summer went. Several juniors went to LEAD in North Carolina. It was neat to learn how different parts of the country have commodities that we can not raise here in Pennsylvania. Next year the LEAD Conference will be held in the Big Sky State, Montana! Keep an eye out for more information.

Just a reminder that the juniors will hold their annual Farm Show meeting on Saturday, January 6th at around 2pm in the Erie Room. Look for a meeting notice from Kaitlin Bell.

Keep an eye out for information about the Semen Sale that will be held in conjunction with the Finest Female Sale.

Anyone interested in running for an office in the Pennsylvania Junior Angus Association please contact Daniel Rohrbaugh at drohrbaugh99@gmail.com

Congrats to all of those on a successful summer show season inside and outside the ring!

Thanks – Daniel Rohrbaugh – President

PA Junior Angus Association Meeting Notice

January 6, 2018

2:00 PM – Erie Room

2017 LEAD: Navigating in North Carolina

The NJAA held the 2017 LEAD (Leaders Engaged in Angus Development) conference in Raleigh, NC. The Pennsylvania Junior Angus Association had eight juniors attend in which they participated in Angus industry informational workshops, team building and leadership mixers, and multiple North Carolina Agricultural farm tours. This four day leadership conference provided juniors with present day information on the trades of NC agriculture. Tobacco, sweet potato, and eastern crawfish farms were included in many of the farm visits, as well as a trip to North Carolina's Caterpillar plant. Scott Farms walked the juniors through the everyday life of growing, packing and shipping sweet potatoes and tobacco. Wood Angus hosted and catered a meal for the conference one evening along with a tour of the farm and a cattle judging contest. Throughout the conference there were multiple keynote speakers and retiring thoughts from past board members. The conference was once again a huge success, granting junior members with once in a life time experiences and sparking new friendships that will last a lifetime!

5 item checklist to prepare your cow herd for winter

Help minimize the time and resources needed to maintain a healthy, productive cow herd going into the winter with a little attention up front. Make sure the winter goes smoothly and you will be calving out healthy, growthy calves next Spring.

Industry Voice by CRYSTALYX® Brand Supplements | Nov 01, 2017

Fall is in full swing, here's a quick check list to make sure your cow herd goes into winter in good shape.

1. Delayed harvest

Many areas in corn country are seeing harvest delays due to cooler summer temps and/or recent wet fall weather. Regardless, it can interrupt not only your normal fall schedule of activities but also the availability of feedstuffs. This might mean your cows will be running on pastures longer than they should because availability and quality both decline sharply. Making sure you have an available protein supplement out with those grazing conditions can help extend your pastures until corn stalks are ready for grazing.

2. Stronger calf prices compared to last year

There are reports that depending upon the size of your calves, prices are anywhere from $100 per head higher to up to $300 higher for heavier calves, compared to this time last year! That's great news and you should make sure you are treating your calves right. Make sure you have them fully prepared for weaning or if you are retaining ownership you have a solid receiving program to get them started off on feed without any health issues. One sure fire way of getting this accomplished is providing a self-fed supplement prior to weaning and/or in the first 28 days after weaning.

3. Crop aftermath grazing

There are many producers that have already or soon will have the opportunity to move the cow herd to harvested cropland. Regardless of the crop, there usually are good pickings for a cow herd once fields have been harvested. As with grazing pastures, the quality is better up front and will begin to decline with each passing day. Hard frosts and limitations on moisture conditions will speed up the declining quality. You can maintain cow performance and ensure that your herd goes into the winter in good shape by offering a self-fed protein supplements in these grazing situations. Typically, producers will comment that consumption is low when cattle are first exposed to crop aftermath when both quality and availability are plentiful. As you monitor consumption you will easily tell when conditions become more limiting as intake will increase. If self-fed supplement intake is on the high end it is probably time the cattle need to be moved to where more forage is available.

4. Replacement heifers

Once the calf crop is weaned, a first pass is often made at sorting out heifers that are replacement candidates. There are numerous ways that replacement heifers are managed when selected from within your herd. The main objective nutritionally is to keep them growing so they can achieve their target weights for breeding next spring. As farm and ranch activities start to settle in for the winter, many producers have had good success with turning these heifers back out on fall and early winter grazing with a self-fed supplement that provides a nice protein boost with solid mineral and vitamin fortification combined with the ionophore, Bovatec® to keep them growing and on track for optimal reproductive development.

5. Monitoring cow body condition

You may not have had a close look at your herd for many months as they have been out on pastures grazing since last spring. Now is a great time to observe cow body condition while there is still time to stop weight loss and possibly even add body weight/condition if needed before the colder winter months. If bulls were turned out in June or July, your cow herd is still in the 2nd trimester where nutrient requirements are at their lowest. As you move to December, you enter the last stage of gestation in addition to moving further into winter where you are either depending upon stored forages and feeds or a declining pasture quality. The window to help your herd add some additional condition will be closing soon. Don't delay on providing some supplemental protein if your herd could use a little extra. Protein will help improve both forage intake and fiber digestibility so they can get more energy out of the forage consumed.

These are just a few reminders for you to consider when evaluating your herd to help minimize the time and resources needed to maintain a healthy, productive cow herd going into the winter. A little attention up front will make sure the winter goes smoothly and you will be calving out healthy, growthy calves next spring.

CRYSTALYX® Brand Supplements has the barrel to help your cow herd prepare for winter. Whether it's CRYSTALYX® Brigade® and Battalion® prior to weaning and/or in the days after weaning or Iono-lyx® in the blue barrel for replacement heifers, research trials, field trials and years of customer experience have shown the convenience, labor savings and proven performance of these products.
