PENNSYLVANIA ANGUS ASSOCIATION

Celebrating over 80 years!

Fall 2025 Newsletter

Across the President's Desk

Hello Angus and Beef "Promoters"

A big thank you to the membership for electing me as your President for the upcoming year. As we work to move the beef industry and Angus genetics forward, let us keep the people (members, Juniors, feeders, packers and consumers) in mind as we enjoy higher prices and strive for more efficiency.

A huge thank you to our past officers and directors. As we move through various transitions within our association let's welcome and assist our new officers and directors. Remember we are here to assist and promote our cattle, our product and our membership. If you have ideas, a suggestion, problem or questions please contact a board member. We will see what we can do to get it done. Remember to promote Angus cattle and membership as your summer winds down with Ag Progress Days, Fairs and various Field Days and sales in the upcoming months.

Hope your pastures are green, the temperatures are comfortable, and your program is moving forward.

Til we meet or visit, take care,
Dale
PA Angus President

Health & Husbandry

Finish the race of feeder-calf marketing strong.

By Brad White, Angus Beef Bulletin Columnist

One of my sons ran cross-country in high school. I was exhausted just watching. After a long race, the last sprint to the finish was a difference maker for many runners.

Weaning is the homestretch in cow-calf production. Just as runners can lose pace in the final stretch from fatigue or lack of preparation, calves can stumble through weaning after a productive summer. After investing a year into a calf crop, producers need to ensure calves finish strong by preparing for weaning, monitoring the trouble window and managing the environment.

Preparing for weaning

The time leading up to weaning is an opportunity to prepare calves for the transition period. Weaning causes significant social, dietary and environmental changes for the calves.

Stress is a natural response to novelty, but stress can also hamper performance and lower immune status. The more novelty we remove from weaning results in smoother adjustments for calves to the new circumstances.

For example, if we are planning to wean and feed calves a ration in a drylot postweaning, we may want to start exposing them to this ration in small quantities a few weeks prior to weaning. This can be accomplished by using creep feeders or setting up a gate that only the calves can get through into a small feeding area.

The goal at this point is not to focus on supplemental nutritional value, but rather to allow cattle to become accustomed to feeding times and processes.

With that goal in mind, try to make the process and feeding mechanisms as similar to postweaning methods as possible to allow cattle to form a defined routine.

Water is another area that often changes, especially if cattle transition from watering in ponds or creeks to watering from a well or rural water supply. If exposure to the new water source is possible while still with the dam, this may make the transition easier.

In addition to minimizing postweaning novelty, the preweaning phase is an excellent time to build immunity using a vaccination program. Vaccinations during this time can help animals mount an immune response prior to exposure to pathogens, and better levels of immunity can help keep calves healthy. Work with your veterinarian to discuss options for preweaning vaccines during this period, and be sure to follow label directions on vaccines. Some feeder-calf marketing programs have vaccination requirements, so vaccinating at this stage may help you qualify for a specific program.

The trouble window

Weaning doesn't cause illness. However, stress, commingling cattle from multiple sources, ration changes and new environments can all contribute to a higher risk for disease.

Cattle are at the highest risk for disease soon after weaning (within one to three weeks), and the most common diseases affecting cattle at this stage are respiratory disease and gastrointestinal (GI) problems. Observe the cattle closely during this period to monitor for potential signs of disease, and have a plan for intervention when illness is identified.

Respiratory and GI diseases often have similar clinical signs, including depression, reduced feed intake, hanging back from the group and rapid respiration. If these signs are observed, further examination of the individual animal is warranted and assessing a rectal temperature is often a good idea.

The most common GI problem at this stage would be acidosis if cattle were moved rapidly to a high-starch diet. These cattle often have loose stools and do not have an elevated rectal temperature. By contrast, cattle with respiratory disease often have an elevated rectal temperature. Work with your veterinarian to identify the appropriate treatment protocol for cattle identified as ill.

Managing the environment

The environment for managing newly weaned cattle is an important part of the adjustment. Weaning is often performed when environmental temperatures are warm and providing adequate water is critical.

Managing functional access to water, as well as water quantity, is important during this phase. The water should be easily accessible by calves of all sizes. This includes managing the water height and maintaining a good, clean water delivery mechanism.

Cattle may not be used to provided feed, and forming a routine as soon as possible is helpful when adjusting the cattle to a new ration. Maintaining the housing area to limit mud and allow adequate dry areas for cattle to rest is also important. In some circumstances, bedding in a portion of the pen may allow cattle a dry place to rest.

Conclusions

Weaning is a necessary component of the beef production system, and can be a stressful time for calves. Managing the preweaning period to build immunity and minimize postweaning novelty encourages a smooth transition to the next production stage. Monitor cattle closely during the early postweaning period for signs of disease to allow early health interventions. Provide a good environment for postweaned calves to promote health and performance.

PA Angus Ladies Auxiliary Update

Submitted by Tammy Weaver, President

The PA Angus Ladies Auxiliary had a busy summer. The annual meeting was held in conjunction with the PA Angus Breeders' Show in Huntingdon, PA. The new officer team includes Tammy Weaver – President, Sarah Sparks – Vice President, Hannah Miller – Secretary, Sue Mayle – Treasurer, and Valerie Trowbridge – Immediate Past Present. While at the Breeders' Show, the Ladies Auxiliary held a successful auction and Duck Derby. These two events are the major fundraising activities for the auxiliary. A sincere thank you to all that support the auction with their purchases and donations, as well as those purchasing Derby Ducks!

Youth are the primary beneficiaries of the funds raised by the auxiliary. Youth represent the foundation of our future – tomorrow's leaders, thinkers and changemakers. The values, habits, and behaviors they observe today will shape the kind of world they will create tomorrow, including leading our organizations. That's why it's crucial for all of us as mentors, leaders and communities to set a strong, positive example. Whether through kindness, integrity, or responsibility, every action we model becomes a lesson that can guide and inspire the next generation. The PA Angus Ladies Auxiliary is thankful for our volunteers and supporters that make it possible for us to support our PA Angus youth. This summer we financially supported our PA Angus Queen, Maddie Bowen, as she attended the Atlantic National Angus Show and the PA Breeders' Show. We supported Lee Sweitzer as a delegate and a showmanship representative to the National Junior Angus Show. We also sponsored the PA Angus Breeders' Show.

We welcome any ladies that would wish to join our group or those that simply would like to volunteer. Look for upcoming raffles and other fundraisers this fall. When we invest in our youth – through guidance, example and opportunity – we are shaping a brighter future.

Spring sure has taken a long time to turn to summer but these past few weeks haven't failed to be hot, sticky, and long for our Angus cattle! Although it was a challenging spring with all the inches of rain we got, all of our pastures are filled with deep, thick, grass! The PJAA sure has been busy at our summer shows, planning for our next fundraiser and several members are attending LEAD in Washington D. C.!

Our most recent meeting was at our PA Angus Breeder's Show where we discussed our plans for our fundraiser! Kinleigh Grim will be leading a cooler raffle with multiple donated goodies! The first ticket picked will receive the highest price and then so on and so forth! Our goal will be to grab members of the fundraiser committee to help start selling tickets at KILE! Some ideas for the prizes are:

- TransOva Gift card
- Semen Bundles
- Bucket filled with show supplies
- Feed Supplements
- Cooler with Cups/ Mugs

Follow us on Facebook!

If any members have ideas to add on the fundraiser that weren't able to attend the meeting at Breeder's Show, please feel free to reach out to Kinleigh Grim, Madison Bowen, or advisors!

We look forward to seeing you at upcoming shows and events! Thank you!

Sincerely,

Kinleigh Grim
